On 10th March, The Capital Hotel, winner of the UK Tea Guild's Award of Excellence for Top London Afternoon Tea 2012, is offering its traditional British Afternoon Tea for the most important of women – mothers. The menu, created by acclaimed chef Nathan Outlaw and his head chef, Pete Biggs, will be served from 2.30pm-5.30pm and will be priced at £25.00 per person or with a glass of Ruinart Blanc de

Blancs Champagne at £38.00 per person. To make reservations call 020 7591 1202, or for more information visit www.capitalhotel.co.uk.

Located in fashionable Knightsbridge and just a stone's throw away from Harrods, Harvey Nichols, Sloane Street and the King's Road, Afternoon Tea at The Capital provides the perfect pairing with a day's retail therapy, and is the ideal thank you to all mothers. The menu features classic British teatime treats and sandwiches, including smoked salmon & watercress on wholemeal bread; Cornish cracker cheddar and pickled shallot served on white bread; and crab mayonnaise and cucumber on wholemeal bread. Freshly baked sweet delights include The Capital's signature homemade Eccles cakes; saffron and custard Tarts; and rhubarb and ginger trifle. Afternoon Tea is completed with an assortment of warm scones accompanied by the hotel's own strawberry jam and clotted cream.

Afternoon Tea at The Capital is served in the relaxed and sophisticated sitting room, decorated in warm plum tones with large windows overlooking Basil Street, or The Capital Bar. It can be accompanied by a selection of champagnes, wines and cocktails for those who would like to make Mother's Day that little bit more special.

Opened 40 years ago by David Levin as London's first boutique hotel, The Capital sits enviably in the heart of Knightsbridge, just minutes from both Harrods and Harvey Nichols. As well as the restaurant and bar, it offers 50 individually decorated bedrooms with an emphasis on English design. Still run by David's daughter, Kate, it is one of few hotels to hold 5 red star status.
